

Nepalese Flood Victims Urgently Need Basic Necessities, Household Goods, and School Supplies

Buddhist Relief Mission is extremely grateful for the generous donations which we received for Nepal flood relief. Those funds were essential for immediate emergency relief activities. The remarkable rescue of survivors after many days has been heartening. As we can all see from the news reports, however, the tragedy continues, the disaster remains, and the danger lingers. Some areas have been cleaned, but others must be abandoned. It is not yet clear where thousands of the displaced villagers will be able to resettle. In the interim, they require urgent assistance. It is also necessary to get the children back into school. Of course, all of the educational material and supplies they had were lost.

Buddhist Relief Mission has been able to contact a local organization, Lumbini Social Services, which is working very diligently and conscientiously to address these issues. Furthermore, all of their relief supplies are purchased locally, which keeps money in the hands of Nepalese merchants who are themselves recovering. We appeal to our donors to help us support their programs. In one photo, you can see the students from a girls' school helping pack the supplies.
